10 TIPS TO GET YOUR CHILDREN INTERESTED IN READING

Reading is crucial for academic success, but it's also a great way to help kids develop their imagination and creativity. Here are 10 ways to make reading more enjoyable.

1. Let them choose what to read and help them find books that speak to their interests.

2. Make reading more fun. Change your voice when reading stories out loud, or have your child read every other page. When they're older, share a nice moment by sitting alongside each other as you each read your own book.

3. Engage them. Ask them what they liked, answer their questions about what they read and explain difficult words. Showing interest in the books your kids enjoy will motivate them to keep reading.

4. Set up an inviting reading nook at home.

5. Make reading a part of your child's daily routine. Aside from reading at bedtime, you can also slip notes into their lunchbox and get them to help you read road signs, your grocery list and even your mail.

6. Make time for regular reading in your own routine. Your children will likely want to imitate you. Share your enthusiasm for what you're reading and demonstrate how fun it can be.

7. Make them read aloud. Be patient and congratulate them when they do well.

8. Listen to audio books. Hearing the words as they follow along in their book facilitates learning.

9. Diversify their reading materials. In addition to books, get them comics, illustrated novels and magazines.

10. Visit a library. Many offer activities for children and they're typically staffed with people who want to share their passion for reading.

FOSTERING CREATIVITY IN KIDS

Creativity is an essential life skill as it allows for the ability to adapt to new situations and solve complex problems. Here are some ways you can help foster it.

Designate time and space for creating

Provide kids with free time and a space at home where they can influence their environment. The key is to let them control the materials around them without parental interference. This can be as simple as setting up a corner with assorted art materials, a set of building blocks or a box of old clothes for dressing up.

Include them in problem solving

Creative thinking involves the capacity to recognize that most problems have multiple solutions. From an early age, children should be encouraged to come up with ways to resolve the complications experienced in their lives.

For example, allow them to brainstorm ways they can keep their room clean or deal with a sibling who doesn't want to share. They may still need your help to uncover the best answer to the problem, but their capacity to innovate may surprise you.

Encourage them to explore their interests. Another key aspect of creativity involves following up on what stimulates delight or piques curiosity. Even the smallest spark of interest can ignite into a lifelong passion under the right circumstances.

When you notice your children demonstrating fascination with something, encourage them to delve deeper by giving them more information or providing additional resources.

Above all, parents who want to foster creativity in their kids should strive to step back and let their kids experience the world around them on their own terms. Unstructured play is key. Experimenting is essential and letting them try and fail will provide invaluable lessons.
