HOW TO PREPARE YOUR HOME FOR A POWER OUTAGE

A variety of natural disasters, from blizzards and ice storms to hurricanes and heat waves, can damage power lines and leave entire cities in the dark. Here are a few ways you can prepare your home for a power outage.

- Improve insulation. Add caulk and weatherstripping around doors and windows. During an outage, cover your windows with curtains or a blanket to keep the heat inside during the winter and outside during the summer.

- Prepare your fireplace. It should be cleaned at least once a year. A fireplace is a great source of heat, but a buildup of debris along the chimney walls can cause a fire or backdraft. Don't forget to top up your wood supply before winter.

- Install carbon monoxide detectors. If you already have them, make sure they work and that you have extra batteries. Never use a propane stove, barbecue or portable generator indoors.

- Ready your sump pump. Make sure it works and install a battery backup system. This will ensure that your basement is protected from flooding during a power outage, especially one caused by a storm with heavy rainfall.

- Protect your plumbing. Purchase non-toxic antifreeze to pour down plumbing fixtures during an outage. This will help prevent the drainpipes from freezing. Wrap exposed pipes in towels and let the faucets drip to keep water circulating.

A lengthy power outage may require you to evacuate your home. Before you leave, turn off the main circuit breaker, close the water main and drain your plumbing system.

Water Well Hurricane Prep

Protect your wellhead and pump.
If your pump and wellhead are exposed to the elements, cover or secure your equipment.

Protect Electrical Components.
If you lose power, turn off your pump at the circuit breaker and leave it off during the storm.

Fill Tubs and Sinks
Before the storm hits, fill your tub and sinks with water to wash hands and flush toilets.

After the Storm
If you have flooding, do not turn on the power. Do not go near it to avoid electrical shock. Wait for the flood water to recede before approaching.

Inspect the Well and Equipment.
If you did not have any flooding, inspect the equipment and, if there is damage, call a professional before you turn on or try to operate the pump.

5 TYPES OF HURRICANE HAZARDS

National Hurricane Preparedness Week takes place this year from May 3 to 9 and is an opportunity for Americans to learn about the five major hazards associated with hurricanes. Determining which of these pose a threat to your community is a crucial part of preparing your household for hurricane season.

1. Strong winds

Hurricane-force winds range from 75 to upward of 150 miles per hour, even as the storm moves inland. At these speeds, wind can severely damage buildings and power lines. Uprooted trees can block roads and debris may sail through the air.

2. Inland flooding

As a hurricane moves inland and slows, it produces more torrential rainfall. This increases the risk for flash floods and long-term flooding. Mountainous terrain can also increase the amount of rainfall produced by a hurricane.

3. Storm surges

Hurricane-force winds can cause an abnormal rise in the coastal sea level, sometimes upward of 20 feet. A storm surge can travel several miles inland and pose a threat to life and property. This hazard is often exacerbated by natural tides.

4. Rip currents

Storm surges and strong winds may create dangerous waves along the coast. When the waves break, they can produce deadly rip currents. These narrow, powerful channels of fast-moving water can pull even the strongest swimmers away from shore.

5. Tornadoes

Hurricane weather conditions include the two ingredients needed to produce a tornado: warm, moist air and wind shear, a phenomenon characterized by abrupt changes in wind direction and speed. Tornadoes typically form within the outer edges of a cyclone.

For information on how to best prepare for a hurricane, consult the National Weather Service website at weather.gov/wrn/hurricane-preparedness.

DID YOU KNOW?

On April 26, 1989, a tornado ripped through the Manikganj District of Bangladesh, proving to become the deadliest on record in world history. The fatalities added up to 1,300 people, with about 12,000 more suffering injuries.
